

THE WINDS OF TRIBUNE SERIES

The Prophecy and The Circlet

1798. Western Scotland. Cradled among watercoloured shores and misty hills laced in magic, a Fae princess defiantly races against time and destiny - even if it spells her ruinous restoration.

Eilidh, Sovereign Princess and eldest daughter of Britain's Circlet Fae King and Queen, is destined to live her life entirely devoted to serving The Circlet. But her role masks her treasonous secret. Resenting her gilded fate, Eilidh shields her lonely tears behind bounded duty - until Henry appears, a charming English baron who mysteriously inherits a neighbouring dukedom. Instantly enamoured by Eilidh, he embodies her feared desires. Yet his appearance follows the heralding of Tribune: mystical winds signalling eternal change.

The truth shattered the impossibility. Livid, Eilidh rails against Tribune's guidance. But when instructed to ignore its wisdom, Eilidh is incensed. Dangerously defying strict protocol, she learns how it feels to be loved. But prompted by an ancient Fae Oracle's Prophecy, Eilidh learns how a secret lineage carries devastating implications threatens everything - and everyone - she loves.

What does the future scribe for the Sovereign Princess? Time reveals such secrets.

A LOOK INSIDE...

“I love him; I, love this man!” Eilidh angrily shouted in his defence. “And that – that I ken to be absolutely certain. And no vote – no Council, no delegation, no Amendment, no Guard, no Duncan, no order direct or otherwise – will force me to not wed Henry! That I refute your incendiary Council’s claims upon myself or any Fae! I NAE abide their dictations – my actions only willed by my soul’s Beckoning! How can Sovereign Princesses rightly Serve under imposed restrictions upon, our, care, our, love...our will? Tell me, Da. Now! Circlet King! I demand your answer!” Eilidh thundered. She needed not to look to her Honoured King, resolutely standing by her side; his defiant loyalty ever shielded her every word. She loved him. That, she knew was certain. And was ready to admit that truth to herself. And she realized that it was not for any reason other than she knew – from within heart, her mind, her soul, and her very own body – that he was her Divinely-Guided husband...The room fell silent, save for the clanging of the golden clock upon the vast white mantle of the hearth, every click of its second hand reverberating within the room...

“Have I not devoted myself and my entire Path to Serve the very same institution which has granted me such gilded freedom? Have I not, satisfactorily Served my duties? Dedicated endless hours and years of training and time to Serve my duties to navigating the intricacies of human society’s expectations on me? To, shaping my Path for Duty-Bound while ignoring the route it routinely Guided my every step towards? All the while desperately grasping, in my quiet moments of self-reflection, to the one dream where I could find one, miniscule, tapestry thread of happiness? And now, with all appearances to the contrary, I follow Guidance and am rewarded with such...soulful, happiness, I am greeted by your harshness? And what is more, you accuse me of endangering the reputability of our family when I warned you against such actions years ago?”

SARAH ADAMSON Debut Author

Sarah's love of her Scottish lineage is ever-present, and she has explored Alba's highlands, islands, castles, and sacred sites three times. Alba claimed her heart, its western shores bathed in sunset's golden light. Inspired by Sarah's love of Celtic spiritual traditions, folklore and heritage, as well as her years of service in mediumship, divination and energy healing, The Prophecy and the Circlet is a call to follow one's heart toward enchantment and possibility. This novel fulfills Sarah's childhood authoring dream.

Sarah shares her time eagerly writing this series' next books, learning Gaelic, and reading for clients. She lives near Lake Huron's glimmering shores in Ontario, Canada, with her family. Their beloved dog Bree appears in this story!
